Getting Started with Employers

As Direct Care Practices evolve their growth strategies, many engage employers to expand patient panels en masse. DPC practices that work with employers average 3x as many members as practices with only retail memberships.

Types of Employers

Small Business (<50 employees)

Pairing DPC with catastrophic products creates a ~$200/month benefit covering 80%+ of healthcare needs. Not subject to Minimum Essential Coverage requirements.

Fully-Insured Employers

Shifting to higher-deductible plans paired with DPC reduces total benefit cost while eliminating day-to-day out-of-pocket expenses for employees.

Self-Insured Employers

Building a self-funded plan on a DPC foundation reduces unnecessary spending outside primary care and improves care coordination effectiveness.

Renewal Timeline

Group health plans are reviewed annually. Open enrollment begins in October for November renewal. Employers work with benefits advisors months in advance.

Stage	Description
1 Reassessment	Insurers reassess rates based on market and employee health risk
2 Presentation	Employer receives new plan options and pricing
3 Selection	Employer selects plans and contributions per employee
4 Enrollment	Employees choose their plan during open enrollment
5 Completion	Enrollment closes; plan becomes active (typically January)

Small Business Outreach

Direct Care Practices see the greatest success and shorter sales cycles with small businesses (fewer than 50 employees). These employers are not required to meet Minimum Essential Coverage, making DPC an easy, low-barrier add-on benefit.

Define Your Ideal Employer

If you try to work with EVERYONE, you will not work with ANYONE. Define your ideal employer first — then find them.

Three dimensions to consider:

- Company Details — Industry, specialization, size, structure
- Demographics — Location, age, education of workforce
- Psychographics — Industry challenges, healthcare anxieties, pain points

Top performing small business sectors on Hint Platform:

- Manufacturing, Construction, Healthcare & Social Services, Leisure & Hospitality
- 1–50 employees | $15–$20/hr or commission-based workers

Lead Generation

Once you have defined your ideal employer, identify them through inbound and outbound marketing channels. The best DPC practices on Hint saw the most growth by leveraging community connections, patient referrals, and vendor networks.

- Identify all businesses within 3–5 miles of your practice and introduce yourself
- Engage Chamber of Commerce and local association memberships
- Build a communication schedule for top prospects
- Use paid databases (InfoUSA, Judy Diamond, Miedge) for additional leads

The Sales Process

A sales process is your care plan for business relationships. It provides structured touchpoints to track progress, find bottlenecks, and nurture trust over time. Think of it less as "selling" and more as education.

The last one to talk loses. Stay curious, let the prospect lead, and only present solutions after you understand their needs.

Keys to initiating contact:

- Lead with curiosity — ask about their current healthcare challenges before pitching
- Present the program with confidence and communicate value in their language
- Do not create objections that aren't there — let the prospect raise them

- Always ask for their business and close the conversation with a next step

Marketing Materials Checklist

Small businesses are often new to DPC. Your marketing materials educate them through their buying journey. Create materials tailored to business decision-makers, not individual consumers.

Material	Purpose
Dedicated website page for employers	Inbound — educate & capture leads
Video about DPC for businesses	Visual learners & social sharing
Pitch deck / slide presentation	In-person & virtual sales meetings
Employer one-pager / flyer	Leave-behind for decision makers
Case studies / testimonials	Build trust and credibility
Infographics with DPC data	Simplify ROI for non-clinical buyers
Industry news about DPC	Establish thought leadership

Onboarding & Contracting

Once you enroll your first employer group, invest in an onboarding process to educate employees on their new benefits. Adoption may lag if employees aren't paying directly — proactive onboarding is the key to retention and utilization.

Contracting directly with employers is more complex than retail. Consider these factors before onboarding employer-sponsored patients:

- Pricing: How will you structure per-member-per-month rates?
- Eligibility management: How will you handle enrollment changes?
- Invoicing: How will you bill and collect from the employer?
- Minimum group sizes and contribution requirements
- Termination and renewal terms

Benefits Advisors & TPAs

Mid-to-large employers use benefits advisors and third-party administrators (TPAs) to select and manage health plans. Building relationships with these intermediaries is the key to accessing larger employer groups at scale.

- Health Rosetta — national advisor community focused on DPC integration
- Emerging DPC-centric health plan partners (e.g., Decent, Sedera)
- DPC Affiliate Network demand partners for multi-geography employers

What is a DPC Network?

DPC networks aggregate independent practices to serve employers across geographies. A network typically begins with one clinic partnering with others, then contracts directly with employers and retail patients. Patients choose a doctor from the affiliated network.

Starting vs. Joining a Network

	Start a Network	Join as Affiliate
Marketing cost	You bear full cost	Zero patient acquisition cost
Employer contracts	You manage directly	Network handles it
Panel growth	Slower, self-driven	Faster — employer-fed members
Autonomy	Full control	High — you set affiliate terms
Best for	Established DPC with employer traction	Growing practices seeking volume

DPC Impact & Measurement

When pitching mid-to-large employers, lead with data. Pre-contract, share eligibility and claims analysis, current benefit costs, and projected DPC savings. Post-contract, track:

- Volume of employee enrollments
- Employee engagement rates (define "engaged" upfront with employer)
- Volume of specific procedures (avoidance of ER, specialist visits)
- Quality and patient satisfaction data
- ROI metrics aligned to employer goals
